ONE ON THE COLONEL.

HE WANTED AN ANSWER, AND THE SCHOOLBOY GAVE IT.

The Colonel Was a Little Fellow, and the Teacher Was a Strapping Six Footer. With This Data the Boy Knew Exactly What He Would Think.

His name wasn't Colonel Bourbon. but let him be called that for the sake of this Kentucky chronicle.

That he was a little bit of a chap could not be gainsaid by any one who looked at him. Neither could it be denied that he was interested in education and was a school trustee or visitor or whatever it is a prominent citizen becomes when he is interested in the publie instruction of his county.

Not long ago he visited a school in the country taught by a strapping six footer, and he was asked by the teacher to make a speech—an invitation the colonel never refuses, and the same may be said of another not to be mentioned here.

A leading feature of the colonel's address was nutual confidence between scholar and reacher, and he sought to. make it plain by example

"Now, children," said the colonel in the course of his lucid exegesis, pointing through the window toward the railroad, which passed quite near the little log schoolhouse, "what is that we see out there crossing the creek on a

"A railroad," answeredall the school with vociferous unanimity.

"Ah? And how do you know it is a railroad?"

"Because we can see it."
"Very good," smiled the colonel.

'Now, what railroad is it?"

The L. and N."

"How do you know it is? You can's see 'L and N.' written on it anywhere, can you?" 'No, sir; the teacher told us."

There was great unanimity on this point, much to the coloner's delight, but he wasn't through yet.

"You believe what the teacher tells you, do you?" he asked.

"Yes, sir," yelled the school.
"Now"—and the colonel became very abstruse in his tones—"you don't know me as well as you do your teacher, and what would you think if I were to tell you he was lying to you?' This was a poser, and the children staggered at it for a minute or two. Finally a tow headed youngster, with scratch on his snub nose and one of his front teeth gone, held up his hand.

"Well, my boy?" and the colonel smiled encouragingly.

The boy looked critically at the little colonel lined up alongside of the six foot schoolteacher, and then ran his eye up the teacher from foot to head.

'I'd think,'' he said in the most matter of fact tone, "that he'd wallop the waddin outen yer in about two shakes uv a sheep's tail."—Washington Star.
